Residential market update

Demand, sales and new listings all remain in negative territory, according to the latest UK Residential Survey from the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors (RICS), with agreed sales dropping to -31% this month, below the -25% recorded in February.

New buyer enquiries, meanwhile, were down by a headline net balance of -29% in March, virtually unchanged from a reading of -30% a month earlier. This downturn is consistent across the UK, with nearly all regions posting a negative return.

Near-term expectations suggest this pattern is set to continue, although the long-term outlook is more positive. For the next twelve months, the net balance for sales expectations came in at +1%, the first time this measure has been out of negative territory since March 2022. A separate report from Savills suggests that demand is slowly recovering, with new mortgage approvals rising to 33% below the pre-pandemic average in February, up from 41% below in January.

On the supply side, the volume of fresh listings coming onto the market fell slightly in March according to RICS respondents, with a net balance of -6%, compared to -4% the previous month. In contrast, the Savills report states that new instructions surged in March, with data from TwentyCI noting the supply of homes on the market rose to 25% above the pre-pandemic average.

More million-plus sales in 2022

Properties valued at over £1m made up 3.21% of all residential property sales in 2022, according to the Land Registry, compared with 2.75% a year earlier.

The figure has almost doubled since 2019 (1.78%), led mostly by a surge in flats and maisonettes, which are attracting the highest average prices in the £1m-plus market. Last year, the average price paid for high-end flats and maisonettes was £1.91m, ahead of terraced (£1.81m), semi-detached houses (1.66m) and detached houses (£1.62m).

Detached houses still dominate the number of sales, accounting for more than half of all £1m-plus sales. Next up is terraced houses (23%), followed by semi-detached houses (13%), and flats and maisonettes (12%).

Race for less space?

The number of people looking to downsize has risen notably since last September, new research by Savills shows, with more than half of agents seeing an increase in the number of downsizers on their books.

According to Savills, 'right sizers' are the biggest group of homeowners currently considering a move, with 41% of those respondents saying they were hoping to downsize.

Andrew Perratt, Head of UK Residential at Savills said, "Equity-rich older homeowners are some of the best placed to move in today's market as they are less likely to be impacted by higher mortgage costs... Our downsizer vendors are telling us that they will prioritise using the extra equity to help family with their finances, or to supplement a retirement fund and reduce overheads."

Housing market outlook

“While the path for interest rates is uncertain, mortgage costs are unlikely to get significantly cheaper in the short-term and the performance of the housing market will continue to reflect these new norms of higher borrowing costs and lower demand. Therefore, we still expect to see a continued slowdown through this year.”
